Today, I stumbled on a YouTube channel, entitled "Wrong Enough To Know Better" – never encountered it before today. The guy says some interesting stuff. I am going to write a few quotes here, but I'm also going to reference a few viewer comments as well.

"The System That Built Trump: Late-Stage Capitalism Ep.1" is the title of one of his videos.

Quote: 'Late stage capitalism isn't just about frustration with the economy. It happens when most of the systems stop serving the public. It's when public services become private. It's when growth only benefits investors. It's when people feel like everything is rigged because it is. Jobs no longer guarantee stability. Voting no longer guarantees real change – and everyday life starts to feel like it was built around someone else's profit. It's not accidental – it's the result of decades of decisions that shifted power and wealth upwards – and Trump came from that system – he's not an exception – he is the result. He didn't invent political donations, deregulation or tax avoidance. He just operated without shame and with full understanding that the rules didn't apply to him."

Quote: 'Corporations don't apologize. Billionaires don't back down – and Trump understood this and brought that kind of logic to government.'

Viewer comment: "Capitalism isn't broken, it's doing exactly what is in its nature to do."
